International money orders accounts are governed by local regulations on foreign currency transfers. There is a maximum of convertible foreign exchange and the conversion of RMB through selected banks in Singapore is subject to restrictions.

Local RMB products are denominated and settled in RMB, which is also known as offshore RMB, and is different from the RMB deliverable in Mainland China.

RMB is subject to local rules on foreign outward telegraphic transfers and may be sent to a list of countries, except Mainland China. Customers should be aware of the conversion and liquidity risks of offshore RMB products due to supply and demand, and the issue of the availability of an active secondary market.

HSBC does not accept inward transfer of RMB from Mainland China.
